Dick,

I like the general approach. I am skeptical that you can get quality people for 14 weeks! More, I am skeptical that you need them for that long.

Also, there is no constitutional reason that LDD must provide the course director--that would depend on the people available. Oops, the "course chairperson"--whatever that is.

Four weeks preparation and five weeks to do it--should be enough. The person from the directorate must be carefully chosen. You might consider picking the best student for a given class and recruit him to help out with the next one. At any rate, keep the purpose in mind--getting quality people signed up to do the Midcareer Course. Let's make it happen!
